

Asahi Silver Bar

100 Oz. Silver Bullion Bar

Convenience and Quality

The Johnson Matthey Mint has now become Asahi. Although the name has changed, the quality is still as outstanding as ever. The mint produces .999 Fine silver bars in the convenient 100 oz. weight that are both beautifully made and convenient for buying, storing and selling.

The 100 oz. size allows you to make fewer purchases to get the same amount of Fine silver. Rather than going to a local precious metals dealer and lugging your packages home all at once, you can order online from GMRgold and receive your silver at home in the size of shipments you prefer.

The larger bars are also easier to stack and store. Stacks of smaller bars tend to fall over easily and, because of the packaging you keep them in, do not stack as tightly as the 100 oz. silver bars. When you get ready to sell your silver bars, it is easy to quickly take out the amount you want and leave the rest in place. If you keep your silver bars in a bank, you can also get them out of your safe deposit box without any trouble.

The front of the bar is stamped with the purity of .999 and the weight of 100 oz. below the Asahi Refining SLC Mark. The back of the bar is smooth and unmarked. This, too, increases the ease of stacking. The bars are guaranteed by Asahi Refining to contain 100 ounces of 99.9% pure silver.

One more advantage of 100 oz. silver bars is that the premium over the spot price of silver is even lower than it is for smaller bars. Buying them for a precious metals IRA is one of the most economical ways to diversify your portfolio and increase its overall value.

Once you discover the advantages of buying 100 oz. silver bars from Asahi, you might decide to add them to your precious metals holdings more often than you have ever done with any other silver investment. Numismatic coins are interesting and may produce quick and profitable sales, but large silver bars are ideal for your long game in investing.
