Easy to Recognize Authenticity

1 Oz. Gold Bar - Credit Suisse in Assay

Credit Suisse began as a financial holdings company in 1856, but it only began producing its 1 oz. Credit Suisse Gold Bars in 1979. The company is now a leading precious metals supplier, with its gold bars minted at the Valcambi Refinery. Since 1979, Credit Suisse gold bars have continually increased in popularity. The 1 oz. Credit Suisse Gold Bar .9999 Fine in Assay is a wonderful example of an investment bullion bar that has been a staple among gold buyers for decades.

Credit Suisse .9999 Fine gold bars in assay are easy to recognize, not only because of their famous name, but also because of the uniformity to the high standards of this reputable bank. They are minted in 1 troy ounce of .9999 fine gold, of course, and the assay card verifies that this is true. The gold bars are packaged in tamper-evident cases that include the assay card, signed by the Swiss inspector that evaluates the bar before marking his or her findings on the package. When you receive a 1 oz. Credit Suisse gold bar in assay, you can be assured its description matches its true content and purity.

The obverse of this gold bar shows the Credit Suisse name, with the weight and purity below. After an assay mark, the bar lists a serial number that is unique for each gold bar that is produced. The serial number on the obverse should be repeated exactly on the back of the assay card. The reverse has the Credit Suisse Logo repeated in a diagonal pattern.
